Construction Education Center offers training for the construction industry at its facilities in Rockville, Connecticut. Established by Associated Builders and Contractors of Connecticut, the Center offers training and education programs to advance the careers of those involved in the construction industries and to improve the quality and competitiveness of the industry in Connecticut. The Center now operates as a private occupational school authorized to offer postsecondary training programs. It is an approved provider of Continuing Education Unit courses for licensed plumbers and electricians in Connecticut. The CEC is also an accredited National Center for Construction Education and Research (NCCER) provider. NCCER offers a standardized curriculum for over 30 construction trades and has been a leader in construction training for over a decade. A course catalog, schedules, and testimonials are available on its website.
